EDITORIAL

The spring season has drawn to a close and the hot months of summer are now upon us. As the economies of the United States and Europe have struggled to emerge from the recent periods of slow economic growth, one is able to look back and cautiously say that the numismatic marketplace has shown surprising stability through these difficult times.

This list is one of the largest fixed price lists we have ever produced. There are over 700 individual lots and numerous coin and book specials for your consideration. Look through the list - you will find interesting coins in every section.

Our recent New York auction (CNA XXI) did very well with 93% of the lots selling to bidders from around the world. We would like to thank everyone for their support.

Our thanks also go out to our customers who braved the heat and cramped conditions at the recent New York International Convention and finally found us in the back alcove. This show, though hastily put together, deserves to find itself a larger room next year. The idea was great and New York can certainly use an international show during this period of the year.

This issue of the Classical Numismatic Review is being mailed to an additional 2,500 customers who have at one time or another received either the Review or the Seaby Bulletin. Some of you have not received a publication recently. We would like to reacquaint you with our operation. The last couple of years have been very busy for us as we have experienced steady growth.

For those of you travelling to Europe from the USA this summer, stop by and say hello to Eric if you make it to London. Our customers on the Continent and in the United Kingdom are also most certainly welcome.

We would like to thank our sixty-five guests who made it in, despite the rain, for our London reception last month. This went over so well that we are planning to make it a regular affair. Plan on a Friday evening get together before each Cumberland coin fair, including the next scheduled fair in September.

A THIRD CENTURY BC HOARD OF COINS OF WESTERN ASIA MINOR

Richard Ashton

CNG recently acquired what appears to be the bulk of a hoard of fourth and third century BC silver coins from Western Asia Minor. The CNG group consists of 449 Rhodian didrachms ranging in date from about 340 to 250 BC and including almost all the variants struck within that period (see summary catalogue below); an Alexander-type drachm of Lysimachos of a type sometimes attributed to Kolophon and dating to c. 301 - c. 297 BC (Price L27); and a Rhodian plinthophoric drachm (ΔΕΙΚΠΑΘΗΣ and winged caduceus: Jenkins 37). The Lysimachos drachm may well have formed part of the original hoard, but the plinthophoric drachm, which dates to the mid-second century BC, almost certainly did not.

I understand from a dealer who has seen them that a further 250-400 coins from the same hoard were offered on the German market in early 1992. They appear to have comprised mostly Rhodian didrachms of the same series as those in the CNG lot, but also included worn Ephesian tetradrachms (magistrates not known), at least one life-time or early posthumous tetradrachm of Lysimachos, and about six Koan tetradrachms (unbearded head of Herakles right in lion-skin // crab, bow in case, magistrate's name, square border of dots, no incuse square: as BMC 43, SNG von Aulock 2753). The Koan coins are said to be in excellent condition; one of them is said to be Numismatica Ars Classica 5 (25 February 1992), 156, with magistrate ΚΛΕΙΝΟΣ.

A further 50 or so Rhodian drachms, contemporary with the didrachms in the CNG group, appeared on the market at about the same time, and may well have belonged to the hoard.

WESTERN ASIA MINOR

ΑΝΤΙΠΙΑΤΡΟΣ + dolphin

The CNG lot contains several rare Rhodian issues or variants, for example, E - Π + grapes from Series 1a; EY + aphlaston and A - M + trident from Series 2; the rayed didrachms and the hybrid from Series 2A; and the ΑΝΤΙΠΙΑΤΡΟΣ + dolphin didrachms of Series 3. Overall, however, the content is much as one would expect from a hoard of this size and range. The respective degrees of wear on the various issues, ranging from the fairly worn condition of the Series 1a and b didrachms to the fresh state of most of the Series 3 specimens, are pleasingly consistent with the relative chronology which can be worked out on the basis of typology and other hoard evidence.

The nearest parallel for the Rhodian content of our hoard is the 1966 Usak hoard (CHII, 68; W. Leschhorn JNG 36, 1986, pp. 67-94), which contained 5 Ptolemaic tetradrachms and at least 107 Rhodian didrachms, comprising 19 from Series 1a and b, 71 from Series 2, 1 from Series 2A and 16 from Series 3. Another hoard, offered on the London market in 1989 and said to have been found in Turkey, contained at least 36 didrachms, comprising 11 from Series 1a and b, 21 from Series 2, 1 from Series 2A and 3 from Series 3. The Ptolemaic tetradrachms in the Usak hoard indicate that it was concealed around the middle of the third century, a date consistent with the other evidence for the dating of Rhodian didrachms of the fourth and third centuries. The CNG hoard and that offered on the London market in 1989 will have been concealed at about the same time, although it would be rash to assume without further evidence that a common emergency lay behind all three.

It is worth noting that none of these three hoards contained representatives of the anomalous Rhodian didrachm series with on obverse the rayed facing head of Helios characteristic of Rhodian tetradrachms and didrachms of the later third and early second century BC, and on reverse the use of letters (ΔΙ and ΕΥ) more characteristic of the earlier third century (see NC 1989 pp. 1-14). Their absence from the new, and very large, CNG hoard is welcome confirmation that they followed rather than preceded Series 3. However, the absence of these issues and of any representatives of the extremely large Series 4 (with rayed facing heads and magistrates' names) from all three hoards should not be taken as evidence that they followed Series 3 only after a gap, for the magistrate-symbol combinations ΕΡΑΣΙΚΛΗΣ + helmet and ΑΘΗΣΙΑΜΟΣ + running Artemis occur both on Series 3 and Series 4.

Finally, it may be noted that the apparently excellent state of preservation of the Koan coins in the hoard indicates that they were struck not long before its concealment around the mid third century BC.

Robert Ready - Electrotypist

by
Jim Duncan
Auckland, New Zealand

A well-rounded coin collection should contain at least a couple of counterfeits — if only to serve as a reminder to the collector of some of the hazards he must face. That same well-rounded collection could also include a copy or two to much the same reasons.

A few months ago I was offered a Tetradrachm of Euainetos in good Very Fine condition, Sear #937. I was also offered a Stater of Iasos (?) which is not listed in Sear but is listed in A Guide to the Principal Coins of the Greeks Period IIIA, coin 41. I bought them both because the prices were right. And both bore on their edges the letters RR, which is not a degree of rarity. It stands for Robert Ready and he was electrotypist to the British Museum. The coins are both, therefore, copies, but only their weight (and Ready's initials) gives them away.

An electrotyping is a copy made by electrolytically depositing a metal shell against a mold taken from the original coin. (In my two cases, the originals are part of the British Museum collection.) The process has been widely used by museums for security reasons — they can keep their most expensive pieces locked away

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS

We are always interested in receiving articles on numismatics for publication in the Classical Numismatic Review.

Submissions can be erudite or of a general nature, but should relate to classical coins.

Illustrations should be provided by the author, if possible, and can be photographs or line drawings.

We also welcome news of numismatic events, society and club meetings, etc., and secretaries are requested to send their annual program of meetings as soon as it is available.

while they display good or excellent copies. The process is a form of electroplating so the copy is made in two halves which are eventually joined together. And the edge is usually the first giveaway. The weight is the second; and because the electrotypes come from a mold, very careful measurement will also reveal the copies to be larger. But they are, dare I say, good enough to deceive many if not most, especially if the edge is well done. Our Mr. Ready, obviously a man with a conscience, carefully marked his work on the edge RR (or later R or MB).

Robert Cooper Ready was born in Norwich, England, on 28 June 1811, and died in Camden Town, London on 15 May 1901, just short of his 90th birthday. As a young man he became deeply interested in medieval seals and found employment in Norwich and Cambridge before moving to the British Museum in 1859. He received an appointment there on 12 July at 7 shillings a day and soon became a leader in the reproduction of coins and medals by the electrotypes process.

The quality of his work was such that, apart from the weight, his pieces were almost indistinguishable from the genuine pieces. He continued to work for the Museum until 13 February 1897, when his services were dispensed with since he was incapacitated by age. He was 85 years old. He had two sons, both of whom worked for the Museum — W.T. Ready from 1879 to 1882; and Augustus P. Ready, who served from 1874 to 1931. Both made electrotypes.

The Readys were so expert at their craft that their copies were much sought-after (even by the Royal Houses of Europe) and the Museum produced, in June 1882, a price list:

- A full set of Greek coins (800 pieces) - 125 pounds.
- A selection of finest coins, some Roman (400 pieces) - 70 pounds.
- A selection of classical Greek coins (200 pieces) - 33 pounds.
- A selection from the plates in the Museum guide (87 pieces) - 14 pounds.
- Single electrotypes - 2 shillings and 6 pence each.

The British Museum also offered complete sets for schools, museums, etcetera, classified and labeled, in velvet-lined cases, all obtainable from Mr. Ready.

At one time, before the Second World War, the Museum's display of Greek coins was entirely composed of Ready electrotypes, but during a bombing raid in that war the display was destroyed. This was probably on the night of 10 May 1941, when the Museum lost 250,000 books by fire. Westminster Abbey, the Law Courts, the Mint and the Tower of London were all hit and 1436 people died, the greatest number of Britons to die on any one night of the Blitz.

Robert Ready was depicted on a medal in 1879 by G.A. Carter and the portrait is of a gentle bearded old man to left; a man, it seems, of considerable integrity and unsurpassed skill.

So I almost have a coin by Euainetos, and I definitely have two copies by Ready, Electrotypist.

Nero's Artistic Delusions

by Chris Herndon

The emperor Nero (54-68 AD) lived in a world of self-delusion. According to Roman authors, Nero deluded himself as to his talent and proficiency in the arts, especially playing the lyre and singing. Nero was the only emperor who was more interested in being an artist than in being an emperor.

Nero greatly desired publicity and praise in many of his undertakings. Although Nero had been around horses his whole life, he was a mediocre charioteer and frequently fell from his chariot. Tacitus reports that Nero's two main advisors on state affairs, Seneca, a famous philosopher, and Burrus, a military general, tried to prevent the public from ridiculing Nero by setting up an enclosure in which Nero could ride the chariot out of the public view. Soon, however, the public was admitted and even invited. Nero appreciated horses and awarded pensions to veteran horses which he dressed in human clothes.

Nero was drawn to theater possibly because when young, he had been taught by a dancer and a barber. Nero liked for his plays to be realistic. For example, in the play The Fire, Nero actually set the stage on fire. Nero liked to act in certain roles that portrayed some of his own true characteristics. For instance, Nero enjoyed acting the part of Orestes who, like Nero, had murdered his mother. Nero also enjoyed acting the role of a lunatic, a beggar, and Hercules gone mad; all of these roles depicting some facet of Nero's true character.

Nero mixed theater with reality. During the Great Fire of Rome, according to Suetonius, "Nero watched the conflagration from the Tower of Maecenas, enraptured by what he called 'the beauty of the flames'; then he put on his tragedian's costume and sang The Sack of Ilium from beginning to end."

At first, Nero practiced his lyre-playing and singing out of public view. Nero learned from Terpnus, the best lyre-player of the time, did exercises, and ate foods that were thought to improve the voice. As soon as Nero thought himself sufficiently proficient, he made his public debut in Neapolis, now Naples, his favorite city. According to Suetonius, "His first stage appearance was at Neapolis where, disregarding an earthquake which shook the theater, he sang his piece through to the end." There is no mention as to whether the earthquake was considered an omen.

Nero was eager to perform his lyre-playing and singing in public and to compete in contests. The public pretended to like Nero's work, and flattered him by calling Nero and his artistic talents divine. People flattered him because they were afraid of what would happen if they did not pretend to appreciate his work. For example, the holy man, Apollonius of Tyra, was arrested but later freed because he did not seem to clap with sufficient vigor at a street musician's performance of one of Nero's songs.

When Nero performed in Alexandria, Egypt, he was captivated by the methods of the audience's applause. Upon his return, Nero established his personal claque. According to Suetonius, "He also chose some young knights, and more than 5,000 sturdy ordinary youths, whom he divided into groups to learn the Alexandrian method of applause —" (continued on page 6) they were known, respectively, as 'Bees', 'Roof-tiles', and 'Bricks' — and provide it liberally when he sang." The 'Bees' made a loud humming noise, the 'Roof-tiles' clapped with hollowed hands, and the 'Bricks' clapped with flat hands. At every performance Nero paid the leader of each group 400,000 sesterces to insure enthusiastic applause.

Artistic Nero

Suetonius mentions how flatterers compared Nero to gods: "Because of his singing he had been compared to Phoebus Apollo (the Apollo of singing) and because of his chariot-riding to the Sun-God (the Sun-God was the best charioteer), now apparently he planned to become a Hercules, for according to one story he had a lion so carefully trained that he could safely face it naked before the entire amphitheater; and then either kill it with his club or else strangle it." Suetonius also specifically mentions in The Twelve Caesars a coin struck by Nero showing him playing a lyre: "He hung wreaths above the couches in his sleeping quarters, and set up several statues of himself playing a lyre. He also had a coin struck with the same device."

This coin (RIC: 73-82, 121-123, 205-212, 380-381, 384-385, 414-417, 451-455) is an Æ As which was struck around 63 AD. There are 34 different recorded variations listed in RIC. On the majority of the coins, the obverse inscription is NERO CLAUDI CAESAR AVG GER PM TRP IMP PP with his laureate or radiate head to right or left, and the reverse inscription is PONTIF MAX TR POT IMP PP and shows Nero as Apollo Citharoedus walking to the right, holding a lyre. Apollo Citharoedus was a form of the god Apollo, who was the god of poetry, prophesies, music, lyre, and light and truth. Apollo Citharoedus was Apollo of music and of the lyre. In this coin, Nero portrays himself as the god of music and lyre-playing.

Unlike most bronzes of Nero, some of the varieties of this coin lack the usual SC, which is an abbreviation for Senatus Consulto, meaning by the decree of the Senate. In 23 BC, the Senate had received authority over the striking of Æ coins. This coin was struck by Nero, probably without the consent of the Senate, to portray himself as Apollo and may have been intended for private distribution.

The radiate head on some varieties of this coin was probably used to show the divinity of Nero. Most radiate busts in the 1st century AD were used to show the divinity of a deceased emperor or to show the value mark of a dupondius (the crown means two aures). The use of a crown as a value mark frequently occurs in gold two-aure medallions, in dupondii, and in 2nd and 3rd century antoniniani. The crown on the bust of this coin type, showing Nero as Apollo, is not a value mark because the denomination of an Æ As was never indicated by the crown on the bust. This coin is remarkable in that the crown shows the divine nature of a living emperor, not yet deceased.

Nero committed suicide in 68 AD. Even to the death, Nero deluded himself as to his artistic capabilities. Suetonius reports Nero's dying words as "Alas, and so great an artist."

"The English Tower Pound"

by
L.V. Reppeteau

FOR AN ILLUSTRATION OF A POUND SEE LOT #639

When the din of battle abated over Hasting's Field on that fateful day of October 14, 1066 the Duke of Normandy, better known to history as 'William the Conqueror', backed by French steel and Norman archers had won the Saxon throne of England. On that same Christmas, William was crowned King of England; a coronation followed by the wholesale distribution of land, titles, and governmental positions to his Norman followers and mercenaries.

However, there was one Anglo-Saxon institution left intact, the coinage. A monetary system based on a standard coin, the silver penny, and the concept that a pound weight of pure silver when minted should yield 240 pennies. Therefore, a pound weight of silver theoretically equated to a pound value of 240 pennies by tale or count.

Another integral part of this early minting tradition was a system of weights variously called the Saxon Pound or Moneyers Pound and in later contemporary documents as the Tower Pound; consisting of:

- Mite = 1/20th of a grain.
- Grain = A grain of barley/corn round, dry and taken from the middle of the ear.
- Pennyweight (DWT) = 24 grains.
- Ounce = 20 pennyweight.
- Pound = 12 ounces.
- Journey = 30 pounds.

Note: There was also an additional weight designation incorporated about 1264, the Sterling, which equalled 32 corns of wheat (barley/corn) grown in the midst of the ear.

In the market place, silver was weighed and traded using the continental Troy Pound; a system of weights believed to have originated in the ancient French market city of Troyes. This weight scheme, like the Tower Pound, was also based on grains, ounces, and pounds. However, when the trader brought his silver (and later gold) or foreign coins to the Royal Exchange for recoinage, it was weighed using the English Moneyers weights, which were 3/4 of an ounce or 6.25% lighter than the Troy Pound:

- Troy Pound = 5,760 grains or 12 ounces of 480 grains each.
- Tower Pound = 5,400 grains or 12 ounces of 450 grains each.

The merchant received back 240 pennies for each moneyer's pound weight of metal surrendered. The 6.25% differential of the two weight systems was compensation for the expense of manufacturing coins. Part of this seigniorage went to the King and part to the moneyer.

The Tower Pound remained in use until Oct. 30, 1527, when Henry VIII abolished its use and established the Troy Pound as the standard weight. It is believed that this change was prompted by the fact that his father Henry VII had enacted statutes "for the purpose of regulating weights and measures," fixing the Troy Pound as the standard for which all weights were to be regulated. Possibly Henry VIII felt what was good for the goose was good for the gander and took this as the final step to standardize the weight system through out the kingdom.

Tuder was one of three cities in Umbria that issued coins. Tuder was a town of some importance on the left bank of the Tiber. Silenos, an elderly companion of Dionysus, was always depicted with a snub nose and horse's ears. He was balding and pot-bellied. Research found nineteen specimens in museum and private collections. This piece is in a better state of preservation than all but one piece (Lucien de Hirsch Collection, 18). Interesting that the two major sales of Greek bronzes in the last twenty years were both missing this type. (Leu 6 and M&M - Laffaille Collection.)

This specimen is ex Hess 208 (1931) Ausländisches Museum, lot 88.

The Italian mints in the sixth century utilized this interesting type of coin production by which the obverse was mirrored on the reverse, though incuse instead of in relief. Scholars have speculated that this innovative design form was invented by the philosopher Pythagoras, who emigrated to Kroton from Samos c. 531 BC.

Following the suppression of the Libyan Revolt, Hamilcar Barca left for Spain to 'call a new world into existence to redress the balance of the old.' He and his successors greatly extended the area of Carthaginian territory in Spain. In 228 BC, Hasdrubal founded Carthago Nova, ten years later Hannibal left Spain for his historic invasion of Italy. In 209 BC, Carthago Nova fell to the troops of Scipio. It wasn't until 202 that Hannibal was finally defeated at Zama. This coin, which is purported to depict Mago, the youngest brother of Hannibal, was minted during the closing years of the Second Punic War.

Debasement of Roman silver had started with the reign of Nero. Some 150 years later, the denarius' silver content was down to a meager 40%. Caracalla further debased the denarius by introducing a coin that weighed 1.5 denarii but was tariffed at 2 denarii. This coin was the Antoninianus (After Caracalla's official name, Antoninus). The antoninianus is easily distinguishable from a denarius in that the emperor's bust is radiate as opposed to laureate (a crescent is placed below the busts of emperresses). The antoninianus would slowly replace the denarius as the standard coin in circulation.

Elagabalus was the supposed illegitimate son of Caracalla and through this claimed his title to the Severan Dynasty. He was the hereditary high-priest of the sun-god Elagabalus at Emesa in Syria. His reign exposed Romans to the strange rites of his religion. During his brief reign he was married four times to Julia Paula, Aquilia Severa (A Vestal Virgin he married twice), and Annia Faustina. Romans tired of his rule and at the young age of eighteen he was murdered by the Praetorian guards along with his mother Julia Soaemias; both of their bodies dragged through the streets of Rome and disposed of in the Tiber river.

BOUDICCA Queen of the Iceni

Rome

In 61 AD, a Roman treasury official, Catus Decianus attempted to confiscate land from the recently deceased Iceni chieftan Prasutagus' estate. Queen Boudicca refused to turn over the land and was promptly stripped and flogged by Catus' soldiers. Her daughters were raped and land confiscated. In revenge, Boudicca raised an army of over 120,000 soldiers leading them against the Roman fortress at Camulodunum. She burned the town and killed its citizens. After Boudicca sacked London, Rome finally retaliated in force against the Celtic tribes. Nero was finally forced to deal with problems on the frontier, but not before this violent woman had taught Rome a lesson.

From a recent purchase we can offer you select VF examples of Boudicca's coins.

ARTISTIC SILVER DIDRACHMS FROM FOURTH & THIRD CENTURY RHODES

Series I

Series II

Series III

Late in the fifth century the three cities on the island Rhodes (Camirus, Lindus and Ialysus) jointly founded a new capital, giving it the name of the island - Rhodes. This new city quickly achieved prosperity and its coinage became one of the most important of the fourth century BC. The designs chosen were a facing head of the Sun-God Helios, the patron deity of the island, and a rose, a pun on the name of the city (rhodos in Greek translates to rose). The Rhodians were so enamored with Helios that in the fourth century they would erect a statue in his honor - the Colossus at Rhodes, one of the Seven Wonders of the World. The facing head design reflects the style of the master Syracusan engraver Cimon and has close similarities with the facing heads from Catana and Amphipolis. The depiction of Helios on the early didrachms of Rhodes is varied, reflecting the distinct artistic style of each engraver. However, virtually all share a narrow face, burning eyes, ray-like hair and twisted necks; all in high relief. This expressionistic portrayal is characteristic of Rhodian art in the Hellenistic era.

OUR OFFER

From a recent acquisition we are able to offer you a selection of Rhodian silver didrachms. All depict the head of Helios on the obverse and a rose on the reverse. The reverses have various symbols which permit identification by series and period of issue. All pieces come with full attribution and are referenced to Ashton's work on this series which was published in the Numismatic Chronicle in 1988.
